scholarship on immigration to america is a coin with two sides it asks both how america changed immigrants and how they changed america were the immigrants uprooted from their ancestral homes leaving everything behind or were they transplanted bringing many aspects of their culture with them although historians agree with the transplantation concept the notion of the melting pot which suggests a complete loss of the immigrant culture persists in the public mind the oxford handbook of american immigration and ethnicity bridges this gap and offers a comprehensive and nuanced survey of american racial and ethnic development assessing the current status of historical research and simultaneously setting the goals for future investigation early immigration historians focused on the european migration model and the ethnic appeal of politicians such as fiorello la guardia and james michael curley in cities with strong ethno political histories like new york and boston but the story of american ethnicity goes far beyond ellis island only after the 1965 immigration act and the increasing influx of non caucasian immigrants scholars turned more fully to the study of african asian and latino migrants to a sweeping narrative history of american immigration from the colonial period to the present a masterly historical synthesis full of wonderful detail and beautifully written that brings fresh insights to the story of how immigrants were drawn to and settled in America over the centuries. Nancy Foner, author of one quarter of the nation's history of the United States, has been shaped by immigration historians Carl J. Bon Tempo and Hasia R. Diner. Provide a sweeping historical narrative told through the lives and words of the quite ordinary people who did nothing less than make the nation. Drawn from stories spanning the colonial period to the present, Bon Tempo and Diner detail the experiences of people from Europe, Asia, Africa, and the Americas. They explore the many themes of American immigration scholarship, including the contexts and motivations for migration, settlement patterns, work, family, racism, and nativism against the background of immigration law and policy. Taking a global approach that considers economic and personal factors in both the sending and receiving societies, the authors pay close attention to how immigration has been shaped by the state response to its promises and challenges.

This dissertation is a study of Indian migration to metropolitan Detroit. It examines the migration and settlement patterns of men and women, especially through the lens of gender, exploring their shared experiences as well as the sharp differences between their experiences. The study situates Indian migrations within the context of a newly independent India and the changes occurring there since 1947. Moreover, it highlights the centrality of the United States' immigration policies in influencing and shaping the Indian community and its characteristics, especially their remarkable middle-class profile. Although Indians are contemporary migrants who migrated to America in the recent era following the passage of the Immigration and Nationalization Act of 1965, this study historicizes their migration and shows that despite their recent arrival and short duration of stay, Indian immigrants have a history. Questions about their immigration experience and adjustment are probed with special attention given to the Indian community in metropolitan Detroit over three decades. In doing so, the study also situates Indian migration within the changing political economy of metropolitan Detroit in the late twentieth century. The period under review covers the decades of the nineteen sixties to the nineteen nineties.
